In 30 years of legal practice, Michael Marx has developed an ability to quickly discern the essence of issues in contention in order to fashion a resolution that addresses all of the interests involved. He has extensive experience in all aspects of construction disputes, having represented the interests of owners, architects, engineers, contractors and material suppliers. He has an understanding of projects as small as a house remodel and as large as educational buildings or office buildings. He also has resolved legal disputes between businesses and individuals regarding contract matters, professional liability, insurance issues and other types of commercial disputes. His ability to listen to the concerns that are important to each party and his precise communication skills are the traits that are most praised by his clients and colleagues.
